Mobile Lifestyle Advisor

Need answers to your mobility questions?? Want to know the latest in Assistive Technology? Would you like to learn money saving tips on how to purchase your next van, scooter or lift? Get these answers and more from "The Mobile Lifestyle Advisor" brought to you by Disabled Dealer of Virginia and West Virginia. This monthly column might make you roll with laughter, cringe with fear, or jump for joy, but it guarantees to produce solutions that you can take to the bank. So "Let's Get Rolling".

HAPPY NEW YEAR**

Looking forward to a better year? We are too!
Be sure to catch this monthly column for money saving advice and tips during 2010.

Q. I continue to get notices from Chrysler informing me that my warranty is about to expire on my 2007 van. Is it worth buying the extended warranty? I only have 27,000 miles on my van now and with the cost of new vans it does not look like I will buy another one anytime soon. Clara S.-VA.

A. Who has NOT been inundated with phone, text and tweet messages alerting us to the fact that our car warranty will soon expire? While we may be tired of the persistent nagging it does make sense to evaluate the need. Beware that most all of those notices pertain to only the chassis. Owners of wheelchair vans would not think of letting their warranty run out if it covers the conversion equipment. With the high cost of door motor replacements, ramp motor replacements and kneel systems I would advise you to 1) make sure your warranty covers this equipment and 2) keep it current. If you do not have any coverage left on your conversion equipment, seek a reputable NMEDA dealer that sells this type of warranty and purchase it. CAUTION: Read the fine print! Know what you are buying, how convenient it is to get your van repaired and what tow or courtesy van service is included. Your chassis warranty is a different matter. If you are planning on keeping your van a long time as you mentioned, I would get a combo chassis/conversion warranty. If you are considering keeping your van only 4-5 years, extending the existing warranty may not be a wise investment. Now for those readers that are considering a van purchase, negotiate some type of warranty in the deal. If the seller is not willing to offer it, then your assumption can only be that there may be problems coming in the very near future and you better plan for repair cost.

Q. The government is calling for fuel efficient vehicles, which means smaller and lighter weight. They are even talking about surcharges and penalties for driving larger cars. What are we in the handicapped community to do when we need room? Disabled individuals need not to be forgotten when it comes to larger vehicles needed for safe transportation. Ronald M.-VA.

Q. I have been selling GM vehicles for over 20 years and now have older customers who need a vehicle that will handle a lift of some sort to assist in carrying their scooter or power wheelchair. With no GM minivans available, what other type of vehicle will work? Simona H.-VA.

A. These two questions relate to the same challenge, room to roam!! Individuals with larger chairs, prosthetics or who just need room to maneuver to transfer, need full size vehicles. My take on the fuel efficient vehicle is that we will see more hybrid vans and even electric vehicles that can be customized by mobility dealers to solve mobility challenges. However, the old adage of 10lbs. of potatoes fitting into a 5 lb sack is most appropriate. You can be fuel efficient, stylish, dual fuel and all electric, but if you cannot get into the car or van or cannot get your wheelchair or scooter into the vehicle then your mobility is greatly compromised. Let's hope the full size Ford or Chevy van is never discontinued as a lot of people depend on the floor room to handle their individual needs. Vehicles have to be convenient to use both from the care giver's perspective as well as the individual with mobility problems. The whole package needs to be looked at, ease of entry, type of lift you need, passenger space and capacity for storing the necessary equipment that a lot of people take when they travel. Crossovers and small compacts are fine but wheelchair and scooter users need to be cautious when buying a vehicle. For those readers like Simona in the Auto Industry, I would recommend that you align your dealership with a reputable NMEDA dealer so you can answer those mobility questions from your clients when they come up. As the car industry changes a whole new set of mobility challenges crop up. Follow this magazine through out the New Year for new solutions and products

Q. Is it true that you never really learn to swear until you learn to drive?

Jack M.-Va

A. Jack, I learned after trying to work those Sudoku puzzles found in this magazine!!

VECTOR INDUSTRIES CELEBRATES 40 YEARS

What began with some parents wanting to have something for their special children to do after high school eventually became a sheltered workshop business that has been in operation for over 40 years. In 1969 the Waynesboro Workshop began operating in the basement of the old Waynesboro City Library. A year later Valley Workshops was formed and included Waynesboro Workshop, the Staunton Workshop, the Buena Vista Workshop and later the Covington Workshop.

In 1972 the ARC of Augusta donated two acres for a new building which was constructed in 1973. In 1987 the Waynesboro Valley Workshop became Vector Industries and a year later a new warehouse and office space were added. Through the past 40 years Vector Industries has grown from seven employees to over 100. In fact, one employee, Ingold Hahn, has been with Vector the entire 40 years! Overall, Vector has 19 employees with over twenty years of experience.

Ingold Hahn is recognized by Vector Human Resources Manager, Peggy Moore, for his 40 years of service.

Throughout Vector's existence its purpose has been to give people with diverse disabilities the opportunity to earn a living, gain dignity and develop skills, self-worth and pride. Vector's mission has been to employ and train persons with diverse disabilities to enable them to reach their potential as productive community members.

Barbara Gordon explains water saving kits and meal kits to people touring Vector during its 40th Anniversary celebration.

Although Vector Industries is a not for profit, it operates like a business. It trains people to follow proper work rules and good business practices. Employees are evaluated on attendance, safety, quality, productivity, teamwork and other business requirements. Vector is extremely proud of the safety, quality and customer service records that the employees have produced as a team. For example, they are approaching four years without a lost time accident, over two years with only one customer quality complaint and almost two consecutive years of delivering product to the customer on the date they requested it.

These impressive performance results are the main reason why Vector maintains its valuable customer base.

Vector's major customers include the Reynolds Flexible Packaging Plant in Grottoes, Virginia, and American Safety Razor in Verona. Both of these well known companies have been partnering with Vector Industries for 40 years! In total Vector has over 600 customers and proudly serves other key customers including HDT, Parker Bows, Bloomaker and Hollister.

Vector provides a wide range of products and services. Its flexible workforce of over 110 employees continues to surprise and impress its customers with their capabilities, quality and customer service. The skills of this special team allows Vector to excel at jobs requiring quality inspection, product testing, packaging, assembly, distribution, fulfillment, custom projects, and engraving and button making. In addition, Vector has started new businesses such as confidential shredding; assembly of cutlery kits; manufacturing wood stakes for use in surveying, staking tomatoes and trees; cutting rebar stakes; and distributing construction supplies and disposable food containers. Water saving kits are also assembled and sold at Vector.

In summary, it has been an amazing 40 years of growth at Vector Industries. The full impact of what occurs at Vector is difficult to capture in words, but the enthusiasm, teamwork, support for one another and performance results are impressive. I suggest that you strongly consider Vector Industries for assistance in helping you to improve the performance of your business. Not only will you positively contribute to this remarkable atmosphere, but you will be extremely pleased with the outstanding results that you receive. And remember, they have been successfully doing this for 40 years!
